The general look and the feel of the page may be modified by the user including:

- + Skins
- + Fonts
- + Colors
- + Backgrounds

--
Parameters should be set by Mlab to editing for instance font size should be only a few choices

--
As the modifications are made the object being edited updates itself automatically to show the new change. Once the settings are made to the user's liking they can preview the changes or save it to apply to their live site.

--
For the advanced user style sheet code can be modified by selecting the advanced button.

--
Eventually the Skinning API should be opened to the public

When managing friends the user can see who her friends are, who may become friends (pending), who she has blocked, and the ability to invite more friends.

Under the Active tab the user can see her friends and then be able to see if they are mobile enabled, if they have updated their pages, and then they can communicate with a friend or visit their friend's pages

--

Updates are any significant changes made within the last 48 hours. The update status is not based on the owner's last visit to that friend's page

When creating or editing the owner must have a blog topic and text that goes on the top level. The user may decide they don't want to make a long blog on their home page so they can enter copy in the extended text box. Once published this adds a more button to the blog to make the reader open the blog in a new window to view the whole thing.

To assist in blogging there should be a WYSIWYG editor

--
The owner can decide to save the blog as a draft or post right away

--
Also the user can decide whether or not they want comments on their block and if they do if they want to be notified of the new comments

--
A picture may be added from the owner's My Pics gallery by selecting a pic icon in the editor bar

--
A blog is limited to 160 characters

The album/slideshow is oriented around the aspect ratio of a mobile phone

After an album/slideshow is selected or created the user is presented with the options noted to the left. From this point the user can preview their slideshow, delete it, and edit it.

--

The user can:

- + add/change music
- + mute the music
- + add more images to the show
- + set resting periods
- + and set transitions

Also there is a set of actions for each image which are remove, edit, and move.

The user can delete the image from the show - this not delete from the library pool

--

The user can edit the image (demonstrated on the next page)

--

The user can move the image to another slot in the show

--

Adding an image will add the image after the slide the user is currently on. So if the user is on slide two when the add picture button is selected the new image becomes slide three

--

Any permissions set here overrides the global permissions set on the album's list page

--

A slideshow can only display one all encompassing caption and one set of tags likewise viewers can only comment on the whole slideshow
