Selecting the registration link will take the visitor to a new page that displays step one of a three step registration process.

Step One is required and steps two and three are optional.

Registration can be simple or complex or a stepped process (demonstrated here).

Step One asks for the basic necessities to get a member registered and a profile page up and running. If a visitor is already an Apix member they can use their Apix credentials to log-in and have instant access to their profile page. With their Apix profile information automatically filled in.

--

Step two and three will be skippable and not required but the user may want to take advantage of setting up their profile correctly out of the gate.

--

The registrant can see on the left side of the page what will be expected of them in future steps so at the end of step one they can decide if they would like to continue on to the other steps or go straight to her profile.

--

Every field is required. The registrant must say whether or not they are over 14. This checkbox will be left unchecked by default.

--

The obfuscation graphic is important to keep spammers out of the community.

As the user goes through the sign-up process checkmarks will give the user feedback notifying the user where they are doing something right and where they may need to change something.

When selecting a username the system will give feedback to the registrants typing as to whether or not their username is available. The system, however, will not give suggestions for usernames.

Step Three
Tell your friends where they can find you.

We just sent your mobile phone a message which you should have received by now. Enter the code provided in your phone message to the right and then select the verify button.

If you have not yet received the message on your phone you can verify your phone later in your profile.

If the registrant inputted their phone information they must verify that phone with Mlab by inputting a code provided in a message to the phone owner.

If the code is taking too long to get to the registrant, the user may move on without interference in the process of registering.

--

If the phone is not registered in this step and the user decides to move on to step 3 then in the left hand column under step 2 the warning indicator will still be present but then could change to a "green light" signifying they were verified while the user is doing other things in step 3

--

If the user skips to their profile bypassing step three as well as this verification step there will be warning indicator next to their mobile status icon/indicator that the phone has or has not been verified yet.

Step Three may be skipped

This step attempts to get the new member to invite their friends to join or at the very least visit the member's site.

--

The member has two options for inviting people to her pages.

--

Step one and two information may be edited by selecting the corresponding edit link.

--

If this step is skipped or the submit button is selected the new member is taken to their "My Pages" page.

The personal message field is filled in with a system invitation message automatically and may be edited by the user.

Using this method will not differentiate between users in and out of network therefore the message should be generic. We may want to consider not allowing the personal message and just have the user input email addresses to which the system can do lookups as it does in the webmail scraping option.

Once the user has logged into their external webmail account the system will display all the friends in and out of the network.

If a friend is in the network their corresponding username will be displayed next to that friend's email address. If a friend is not on the network no username will be displayed however their email address will be.

--

If the user selects the Import More button they are presented with a selection of external webmail options to choose from. So, if the user has already scraped their gmail account but wants to do Yahoo! next the system goes through the previous two steps again.

When the addresses are scraped the system will discard any duplicates and display a message saying that "X duplicate addresses have been removed"

When the user selects the done button the user will be taken to a confirmation screen

This page is oriented around the new member owner. This is the member's dashboard for managing their pages and components. So, this page will have different interactivity and views compared to looking at a friend's page.

The blue bar above the main navigation bar is a persistent control area for the logged-in owner.

The clipboard is a session based feature that let's the member add content to the clipboard while traversing the site to recall and review later. This feature becomes more relevant on the search results pages and when browsing content.

The alerts area lets the member know that one of their freinds that they subscribe to has updated something in their pages or if a calendar event or to-do has been triggered.

The Message center lets the member know that they have a new message no matter where they are on the site and gives the member quick access to that feature. The new member is sent a message from the system welcoming them and pointing out features and can be viewed by selecting the message center link.

In addition to the components above the main navigation, there is subnavigation below the main navigation bar giving the member quick access to the corresponding page's information. These subsections starting with the "Blog" section will be detailed later in this document.

Every component is set in its location but the component's contents may be managed and edited. The page is defaulted with the profile, tags and buzz battle on the left, the blog in the center of the page and comments and friends on the right. The blog has an entry already put in by the system, giving the user somewhere to begin.

The friends tab is open with a message prompting the member to add and find friends. The messaging system and comments can have permissions associated with them. The Messaging function is only activated when the owner is online. Otherwise comments can be left if the member is offline.

This page is oriented around the new member owner after going through steps one and two of the registration process. This page is similar to the previous demonstration page except that new member has their pic displayed, expanded profile information including description and phone, and the tags module is populated. --

The member's profile pic may be viewed by anyone without FM approval as long as it is viewed on the new member's page. Once approved the pic and profile may be added to public areas of the site like the homepage. --

If the user has signed up using their FM universal login then the profile page will be automatically filled in for them along with an icon and link to the APix homepage. --

If the owner makes any changes to anything within their site they may choose to broadcast these changes to the community.

This page is oriented around the new member owner after they have filled in all three steps of the registration process. This page is similar to the previous two demonstration pages but it has the friends module populated with friends that were invited from step three of the registration process.

The desaturated images with the pending badge are friends who have been contacted and are pending acceptance by them. The fully saturated images are friends who have accepted the owner's invitation. Also indicated on a friend's pic is whether or not they are mobile enabled on Mlab

--

Chat is like Yahoo! or AOL IM. Messaging is session based. It also has permissions associated with it to allow public or just friends participation. Messaging is only activated when the owner is online.

--

Comments are stored in the DB. Comments can have permissions associated with them as well. Comments could allow members not only to write text but also embed images and other media using embed tags associated with content found on the site.
